

"German Syrup"

For Throat and Lungs

"I have been ill for Hemorrhage" about five years, "have had the best medical advice, and I took the first dose in some doubt. This resulted in a few hours easy sleep. There was no further hemorrhage till next day, when I had a slight attack which stopped almost immediately. By the third day all trace of blood had disappeared and I had recovered much strength. The fourth day I sat up in bed and ate my dinner, the first solid food for two months. Since that time I have gradually gotten better and am now able to move about the house. My death was daily expected and my recovery has been a great surprise to my friends and the doctor. There can be no doubt about the effect of German Syrup, as I had an attack just previous to its use. The only relief was after the first dose." J. R. LOUGHHEAD, Adelaide, Australia.

A GREAT EQUATORIAL.

The splendid Telescope Erected at the Paris Observatory.

The equatorial erected at the Paris Observatory is the invention of M. Maurice Levey, sub-director of the observatory and member of the French Institute, and is a marvel of mechanism. Thanks to the dimensions of the telescope to be used, stellar photographs of admirable distinctness can be obtained hereafter. It is not known whether any fresh discoveries will be made, but it will at least make those already known more precise. It was tried a few days ago, and the mountains and craters of the moon were clearly distinguished. They also studied the phenomenon of the absence of dawn and twilight on the moon, as well as the change from night to day without transition. The mechanical part of the instrument is as perfect as clockwork, and the whole forms a real masterpiece. It weighs 25,000 pounds, but it can be maneuvered by an infant.

The polar axis of this equatorial is 59 feet long, and the curve which turns around this axis is 13 feet. The large tube rests on a pillar of masonry. At its top the elbow has a mirror and an object glass 60 centimeters in diameter, the field of which is lit up by a light shown on a plate joined to the tube. M. Levey's equatorial has two object glasses of the same dimensions; one for looking directly at the heavens, the other intended for photographing the skies.

The first is achromatic for chemical rays; that is to say, to destroy the primitive colors that accompany the image of the objective. Thanks to the other objective glass, the observer can take instantaneous photographs. Views of the moon, measuring 18 centimeters in diameter, can be taken, and these the instrument enlarges by projection, making them in diameter as much as 39 inches.

The observer is placed at a height of forty-five feet, the ocular glass is inside the room, but the rest of the instrument is in open sky. A star can be followed in its sidereal movement—that is to say, from its rising to its setting behind the horizon—without the observer having to leave his armchair. An isochrone movement makes the instrument revolve as the star moves, so that it is always before the objective glass. With ordinary telescopes astronomers are obliged to move from their places constantly, so as to follow a star, and sometimes they have to assume positions that are inconvenient, and necessarily prejudicial to the exactitude of their observations.

For fixed stars which have a movement of their own, a mechanical arrangement of this sort permits of their not being lost sight of for a single instant. The edifice is a square tower thirty-five feet high. A moveable tent covers the whole apparatus when not in use, and it rests on rails on which it slides when needed for astronomical observations. —Chicago Herald.

A Wonderful Blind Man.
There is a man whose home is on Canoe Hill, Washington county, Ark., by the name of John McClelland, who is truly a genuine curiosity. He has two brothers living near Nowata and Tailequah, I. T. This man is entirely blind, and he frequently goes from Canoe Hill to Tailequah and then to Nowata, a distance of 80 to 100 miles, on horseback and without a guide, crossing Grand river and the Arkansas river en route. He will also mount his horse and hunt up his other horses, being able to tell exactly how many are together by sound. He will go any distance through the timber, apparently as easy as anyone. His horse will, when passing under low-hanging limbs, raise his head to tell whether the limb will clear his rider's head.

Mr. McClelland will recognize an acquaintance by his voice as readily as any one else will who can see. His blindness seems to be no bother to him as he performs feats in traveling that are truly wonderful. Mr. McClelland has made several trips from Arkansas and the Indian Territory to Texas and back unattended.

Mr. McClelland is a stock dealer, and will buy and sell mules and horses, and is able to buy with profit to himself. At the Vinalia (I. T.) fair once he had a horse that his brother was riding for a prize horsemanship. His brother was not riding to suit him, and he mounted his horse and carried off the prize. Exchange.

Not Quite So Danced with the Queen.
When the Hon. Richard Vaux was in congress his striking personality made a great impression on the correspondents, and they set about to end or amusing stories about him. When questioned as to the authenticity of that most venerable story of his having danced with Queen Victoria the ex-mayor replied that he was a member of the American legation before he was twenty-one years old, and added, with a wink, that the circumstance happened so long ago that he had really forgotten whether he danced with the queen or not. —Philadelphia Record.

Electric Carriage Lamp.
A novel application of the electric light is in the equipment of carriages. Two lamps are on the outside of the carriage and one on the inside, each of three candle power, and all under the control of the coachman or the occupant. The storage battery used is placed at the back part of the wagon body, and will run all the lamps for a period of six hours, the recharging costing only about ten cents. —New York Journal.

On Tuesday John R. Dowd, of Aurora, Ill., chopped his wife in the head with a hatchet. He then stuck a knife in her own heart, dying within a few minutes. Mrs. Dowd is still alive, but there is small chance of recovery. Dowd was in the habit of drinking, at which times he was very quarrelsome.

The Italian government has already sounded the leading Berlin bankers on the subject of a loan to redeem that country from its present almost hopeless financial condition. The response, it is said, has been favorable. The imperial government is earnestly desirous to see Italy put on a sound basis financially in order that Italy may remain free from French temptation.

At White Oaks, N. M., fire raged in the shaft of the Homestake mine from Wednesday to Friday morning. Two miners, D. Timothy and George Drake, were suffocated by gas, despite the efforts of citizens to extinguish the fire and save them. Four citizens were prostrated while attempting to descend the shaft before the flames were extinguished.

Item Kellogg, a messenger of the Pacific Express company, is temporarily under arrest pending investigation as to the disappearance of a package containing $5000 sent from New Orleans to St. Louis. The package passed through the hands of two messengers enroute to the city, the transfer being made at Memphis. The southern messenger claimed that Kellogg received for it at Memphis, while the latter says it might easily have been lost during the transfer. Kellogg's reputation has always been excellent, and his friends refuse to believe him guilty of the theft.

A special from Tableau, I. T., says Ernest a full blooded Seminole, was executed at Waikiki. A month ago Umest quarreled with a fellow Indian knocked him senseless and then chopped the body to pieces with a hoe. A Seminole council tried him, found him guilty of murder and sentenced him to death. Umest was led to Fiat Rock, his eyes were not bandaged, but sat erect, as though for a photograph. Two executioners, selected by lot, were given loaded rifles, and at the word fired a bullet into his heart. He died in two minutes, and the body was buried on the edge of the council ground.
